Hospice is offered to the community as well as residents through Home Care services. Medical, social, emotional, and spiritual support is extended to every hospice resident. They are also provided support and resources to their family and friends. That kind of support helps meet the challenges that terminal illness can bring. Their physicians, nurses, therapists, chaplains, social workers, and volunteers keep hospice residents feeling safe and secure, through such services as pain and dietary management, spiritual counseling, speech and occupational therapy, and even 24-hour support.
